Trial Consultant

Kimberly Young has a mixed background in litigation support and finance. Her experience spans the realm of banking compliance and due diligence to litigation, from simple personal injury litigation to complex, multiparty cases. With a J.D. from CUNY School of Law, Kimberly has extensive experience in legal communication and research, from client intake to representation.

Kim entered college at 16 and attended Portland State University and the University of Texas at Arlington, receiving a Bachelor of Arts in Criminology/Criminal Justice in 2002.

Kim then sought a travel opportunity in the finance industry where she was sent to various financial institutions around the United States completing Due Diligence and Compliance review. A traveler by nature, a couple of cities she had the opportunity to work in were Chicago and New York. Kim decided to move to New York permanently and attend the City University of New York School of Law obtaining a Jurisprudence Doctorate in 2003. During law school she focused on criminal defense and corporate law. Kim got accepted into the Defender's Clinic Program and completed her internship with Queens Legal Aid.

Upon returning to Texas, she decided to combine her banking and finance background with law in the commercial and consumer sectors of finance, performing audits and legal documentation and review. Recently she has focused more on law, contracting with various attorney's and firms providing contract legal services including legal research, client intake screening, and Case/Statute Summarization.
